Revival literature is a genre all its own. Surely it resembles other Christian writings in its main focus on Jesus and His work in the earth. However, no author â€“ no matter how hard they try â€“ can capture the tone that an eyewitness of a great moving of God can relate. Itâ€™s simply because the experience of seeing revival firsthand turns knowledge into understanding. Thankfully, Jessie Penn-Lewis was an eyewitness to the Wales Revival of 1904 and 1905. This little treatise on the movings of the Spirit is a well documented ledger of the awakenings that took place all over this small country. She is able to spread just a little ember of that fire that burned so brightly there; and maybe, this flame of hers will reignite again. I have a special place my heart for stories of revival. Maybe itâ€™s because Iâ€™m looking for one for the world, or maybe itâ€™s because I need one so badly for myself. Either way, to read tales of how Christ moved with power among the world bringing honor to Himself is glorious. I love missionary tales too (youâ€™ll probably notice plenty on this site as time goes on), but seeing the church on a mountain top is always a precious encouragement. Thereâ€™s a reason why we read Nathan Coleâ€™s George Whitefield Comes to Middletown every October. Weâ€™re looking for fresh fire to fall from heaven. This tract is a relatively basic overview of places, times, and events. Thereâ€™s a short description of the call of Evan Roberts to the position of primary evangelist for this time. Christian conferences and town prayer-meetings are described. The words she uses are plain, but there is an authority in them. Godâ™s Spirit moves in among the humdrum recollections of this and that.
